Childhood Memories

The charm of childhood is unforgettable. The childhood days are more precious and leave an everlasting impression on one's life. Those days are full of fun and innocent pleasure.

I was the youngest son of my parents. So, they loved me very much. I was carefree and without any worries at all. I had a lovely friend in my childhood days, we were in the same class, we often recited aloud from our books, and we shared many things in common such as playing, dancing freely and chatting aimlessly. We used to play together and enjoy that. Everything was then so simple, innocent and wonderful. We made paper boats on rainy days and my mother helped us float them in the rainwater. We also collected flowers, caught beautiful butterflies and enjoyed our activities very much. We were then afraid of going into the dark as we believed ghosts roamed in the darkness.

My school days were the best days of my life. I still remember my first day at school. I can still feel how warmly I was welcomed. The affection I received from my teachers, especially my teacher of Arabic who inspired me, and the love I had from my classmates will never be forgotten.

My childhood memories are still haunting my mind and I wish they would return again in my life.

Here is a sample of your best Childhood Memories

On the occasion of the World Children's Day, my school is preparing a contest for the top ten best posts. Thus, I decided to enter that contest with short passage of my childhood memories.

Let me tell you some of my best and worst childhood memories; the best memory was when I got a wonderful gift from my grandfather who came back from the 'Hadj' Pilgrimage, whereas the worst one was when I lost my little uncle in an accident. My first days in the primary school I used to be afraid because I found myself alone with new classmates and friends, but I used to have some best friends as Lakram and Ammar. My best teacher used to be Mrs Melkia and my favourite subject used to be Geography.

I really was happy and excited to have such splendid experiences and precious moments.
